Annie Boeckers advises and represents a wide range of clients in all stages of corporate and government investigations so they can resolve risk and move forward with confidence.

Annie brings a rare combination of investigative experience and corporate transactional background to her government enforcement and corporate investigations practice. She advises and represents clients at every stage of an investigation — from initial disclosure decisions through resolution — working alongside them to identify practical solutions that account for their business realities.

Annie's corporate background in mergers and acquisitions (M&A) and private equity gives her a distinct vantage point when helping corporate clients identify and address potential fraud issues. Before joining Dorsey & Whitney, she completed a six-month secondment at a leading national middle-market private equity fund, and she also worked on the Global Investigations team at an international medical device company — experience that sharpened her ability to navigate complex internal investigations in highly regulated industries.

Annie has developed a focused practice around internal corporate investigations, particularly investigations relating to financial fraud, accounting fraud, investment fraud, and embezzlement. Annie also defends clients in connection with government and regulatory investigations, inquiries, and audits. Annie has represented clients in connection with False Claims Act (FCA) enforcement, including qui tam litigation. She closely tracks Department of Justice (DOJ) enforcement priorities and regularly publishes analysis to help clients anticipate and respond to shifting regulatory risk.

As a former Division I college hockey player, Annie is part of the Dorsey team that represents a collegiate athletics association in connection with ongoing antitrust litigation
