Cameron Half helps issuers, underwriters, shareholders, sovereigns, and investors execute cross-border capital markets transactions and access international sources of capital, particularly U.S. public and private capital markets. He helps connect regional issuers with U.S. and global investors, leveraging more than 20 years of experience in structuring and executing cross-border securities offerings across the United Kingdom, Europe, the Middle East, and Central Asia.

Cameron brings deep expertise in U.S. markets to advise clients on a broad range of capital markets matters, including initial public offerings, rights offerings, follow-on offerings, bond issuances, private placements, and restructurings. Cameron advises issuers from throughout the U.K., Europe, Middle East, and Africa (UK-EMEA) region seeking to raise capital in U.S. markets as well as U.S. issuers seeking to access markets in UK-EMEA.

Cameron has particular experience with clients in the mining and natural resources, power and energy, banking, and aviation sectors, as well as in advising clients from, or with business in, emerging markets. Cameron brings a practical, commercial perspective to complex transactions and to navigating U.S. legal requirements, drawing on experience gained in private practice and in a senior structuring and execution role at a global investment bank. Prior to joining Dorsey, Cameron founded and led the UK-EMEA U.S. securities law practice at a large international law firm.
