Phoenix – 602.837.3051

Denise brings more than 20 years of paralegal experience to environmental, energy, and water law matters in Arizona and the broader Southwest.

Working alongside attorneys, she focuses on the practical, detail-intensive work that keeps complex regulatory matters moving. Denise helps land developers, water districts, and public entities analyze, secure and protect water rights on projects in Arizona, Nevada, New Mexico, California, Colorado, and Idaho.

A core part of Denise's practice is water supply due diligence. She assesses the scope and breadth of water rights for development projects, identifies gaps or vulnerabilities, and helps clients secure the documentation needed to support their projects. She also works with Water Quality Assurance Revolving Fund (WQARF) sites, supporting mediation and evaluation processes on behalf of clients navigating Arizona's environmental cleanup framework.

Denise has also contributed to legislative drafting efforts and supported lobbying before the Arizona Legislature, giving her an unusually broad view of how regulatory policy is shaped at the state level.
