

Emily Mangelson

Senior Paralegal

Salt Lake City

Emily supports attorneys and clients through the full lifecycle of domestic and foreign patent prosecution, turning complex portfolio management into a streamlined process that keeps intellectual property protected and moving forward.

Emily brings more than two decades of legal experience to domestic and international patent prosecution and portfolio management. Working alongside attorneys in Dorsey & Whitney's Patent Prosecution & Strategy practice, she manages the details that keep patent portfolios on track — from filing and correspondence to deadline monitoring and foreign associate coordination — so that nothing falls through the cracks in a process where precision is everything.

Emily's work spans both U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) prosecution and foreign patent filings, giving clients a consistent point of contact across jurisdictions. Her long-standing experience in the field means she understands not just the procedural mechanics of patent prosecution, but the practical pressures that inventors and in-house teams face when managing large or complex portfolios.

Select Experience

- Serves as lead patent paralegal for a multinational technology company's patent portfolio, overseeing client communications, docket management, patent filings, and invoicing, and helping ensure the timely administration of a complex global patent prosecution program.

Education

- Salt Lake Community College (A.A., Paralegal Studies, 2009)
- University of Utah (A.A., Business Management, 2004)
- University of Utah (B.A., English, 2004)