Graham structures and negotiates lending transactions for lenders and borrowers, turning complex financing arrangements into closed deals.

Graham advises clients on both sides of the capital table — lenders and borrowers alike — through every stage of a financing transaction. His practice centers on structuring, negotiating, and executing lending transactions, with a focus on ensuring that the deal terms clients reach reflect their underlying strategic objectives.

Whether a client is deploying capital or seeking it, Graham engages with the full arc of the transaction: from initial term sheet through documentation and closing. His work spans diverse financing arrangements, giving him a grounding in the range of structures that commercial lending deals can take across different borrower profiles and credit contexts.

Graham is a member of Dorsey & Whitney's Finance & Restructuring group, where he works alongside attorneys advising on banking, private equity finance, and bankruptcy matters — experience that sharpens his understanding of how lending structures perform under pressure.
