Job draws on a deep understanding of judicial decision-making to sharpen his legal research and writing skills, helping clients frame complex issues with the court's perspective in mind.

Job's background in judicial clerkships, legislative legal and policy work, and in-house legal work gives him a broad perspective on the issues facing courts, policymakers, and businesses. His judicial experience informs his evaluation of legal arguments and his ability to translate complex facts and law into clear, focused writing. Together, his legislative and in-house experience complement that foundation with an appreciation for the policy considerations and operational priorities that shape each matter.
