Kimberly helps clients protect and maintain intellectual property rights across U.S. and international markets, bringing clarity, coordination, and precision to complex IP prosecution.

Kimberly brings more than 37 years of experience supporting patent, trademark, and copyright matters, with particular depth in U.S. and international patent prosecution. She works closely with attorneys throughout the prosecution process, assisting with the preparation and filing of U.S. and foreign patent applications, including national phase entry into the United States under the Patent Cooperation Treaty (PCT), across a wide range of technical fields.

Before joining Dorsey & Whitney's Denver office, Kimberly spent 18 years embedded in the intellectual property practices of mid-sized and boutique law firms in Silicon Valley. That experience gave her deep familiarity with the procedural requirements, complex filing processes, and fast-moving deadlines involved in patent prosecution for technology-driven clients.

Today, Kimberly supports Dorsey's patent attorneys throughout the domestic and international prosecution process, coordinating the preparation and filing of applications, managing foreign filing programs, and helping keep complex dockets on track. Her experience enables her to anticipate procedural requirements, identify issues early, and help move prosecution forward efficiently and accurately.
