Megan Newell supports public finance transactions for counties, cities, hospitals, and school districts—turning complex financing documents into the funding that builds communities.

Megan is a paralegal in Dorsey & Whitney's Public Finance practice in Des Moines, Iowa, where she prepares financing documents and agreements that move public projects from planning to reality. Her clients include counties, cities, hospitals, and school districts—entities whose ability to fund essential infrastructure depends on precise, well-structured documentation.

A significant part of Megan's work centers on the Iowa Finance Authority (IFA), where she supports multiple funding programs: the Beginning Farmer Loan Program, the Single Family Mortgage Program, and the State Revolving Fund Program. Each program carries its own regulatory requirements and documentation demands, and Megan helps ensure those details are handled accurately so closings stay on track.
