

Qing (Jason) Lin

Of Counsel

Beijing – (86-10) 8513-5960

Jason structures cross-border capital markets transactions and defends Chinese clients in U.S. and Hong Kong securities enforcement proceedings — bridging two of the world's most demanding regulatory regimes in a single practice.

Jason Lin brings a focused practice to clients operating in U.S. and China capital markets. Based in Dorsey & Whitney's Beijing office, Jason advises issuers on initial public offerings on U.S. exchanges, including Nasdaq and the New York Stock Exchange, as well as on listings in Hong Kong — guiding clients through the full arc of a transaction, from due diligence and disclosure to ongoing reporting obligations under applicable rules.

What distinguishes Jason's practice is the combination of transactional and enforcement work. Jason represents Chinese companies and high-net-worth individuals in investigations and enforcement proceedings before the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) and the Hong Kong Securities and Futures Commission (SFC), including insider trading charges and financial fraud inquiries.

On the corporate side, Jason advises public and private companies, private equity funds, and financial institutions on cross-border mergers and acquisitions, direct investments into the United States, joint ventures, and general corporate governance. Clients range from state-owned enterprises and leading Chinese manufacturers to international issuers seeking access to U.S. capital markets.

Jason also counsels clients on export control compliance, economic sanctions due diligence across various jurisdictions, and CFIUS matters — areas of growing importance for Chinese companies with U.S. operations or ambitions. For clients facing cross-border commercial disputes or restructuring proceedings in U.S. courts, Jason provides counsel grounded in a practical understanding of both legal systems.
