

Motion for Stay of Client's Removal Filed in U.S. Supreme Court

Dorsey sought asylum for a family from Kenya that suffered persecution and torture from a religious sect. Our client's application for asylum was denied. Dorsey appealed to the Eight Circuit and the ICE, both were denied. The family overstayed their voluntary departure. Next our client was taken into custody by the ICE. After many appeals and motions, we filed an emergency petition to stay our client's removal in the United States Supreme Court. The Solicitor General settled the issue not to remove our client or his family. The ICE refused to release our client. Dorsey then filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota to challenge the detention. Finally the government agreed to a release him from detention if he posted a bond and enrolled in the "ISAP" Intensive Supervised Appearance Program which involved an ankle monitor and frequent reporting obligations. Dorsey filed a motion for an immediate bond hearing to challenge these conditions. The Immigration Judge agreed to reduce the bond but concluded he lacked authority to eliminate or limit the ankle monitor. Dorsey then filed a motion to eliminate the ankle monitor, which the Immigration Judge granted.
